

Customer Case Study #2

Active Archive

Customer Situation:

A Federal Government Client was given a new project to protect large amounts of picture files. The files in question are actually digital scanned copies of historical books. The files needed to be maintained for the “Life of the Republic” and therefore are sensitive in nature. Just backing up the files over and over again would be expensive and time consuming. The client was looking for a modern solution to manage this explosive data growth issue.

Our Solution:

We teamed with Commvault software to solve the customer issues. Commvault allowed us to Active Archiving whereby we setup the system to “Archive” the file into the Commvault Content Store. The process of archiving consists of capturing the file and making a copy of the file into the Commvault Content Store, replacing the original file with a stub file and placing an infinite retention for the file within the content store. The process of Active Archive drastically minimized the data storage space the client was required to maintain, allowed the client to have multiple Auxiliary Copies of the files and maintain them in the smallest possible footprint within the Content Store. This solution has saved the client 10s of thousands of dollars over the course of 2 years.
